by ottawa observer

With the end of the holiday season there is an obvious quickening of political interest and discussion in the Capital. Particular topics of interest include such questions as: Should Canada join the Pan-American union when invited to do so; should Canada immediately use its power to discontinue appeals to the Privy Council of Great Britain; what should Canada's attitude be at the meeting of the general assembly of the United Nations opening Sept. 17; and of course Canada's continual interest in greater freedom of trade on which the welfare of her citizens depends.

Free or Planned Trade

An interesting trend of the discussions on trade is the admission that now comes from the socialists that planned trade is, from the point of view of the welfare of the masses of people, inferior to freedom of trade which requires facilities for and the will to expedite multi-lateral trading.

The Ottawa Citizen, which is now looked upon as the chief apologist for socialism in the capital puts forward the unusual claim that "full employment" can only be obtained by bi-lateral agreements. It does not attempt to explain how it comes to this conclusion in spite of evidence that multi-lateral trading would be greater and would therefore create more employment. This evidence is admitted in its final sentence which says that "countries which want a stabilized economy will 'plan' it at a low and not at a high level."

While there has been considerable proof in actual practice this is the first open statement from socialist that their "system" will give a lower standard of living to those who adopt or permit it.

The Privy Council of Great Britain

There is still considerable difference of opinion on how soon the government should act to discontinue appeals from Canada to the Privy Council of Great Britain. The Privy Council itself decided that the parliament of Canada has the right to have the final court of appeal a Canadian one. For years those who wanted to maintain appeals to the Privy Council were accused of being "Imperialists" and colonially minded. The addition of Union National Premier Duplessis of Quebec to the ranks of those who would retain the right of appeal to Britain may change this charge but will not strengthen or reassure them in their stand.

It appears to this observer the weight of public opinion in all provinces is in favor of having a Canadian Court give final judgment on Canadian questions.

Canada's Position in The Americas

While there is much interest in political circles here in Canada's position in relation to the other countries of North and South America it is difficult to find any general or crystallized opinion. No one denies that Canada must play her full part in the British Commonwealth of Nations. Few, if any will deny we must also play our full part as a sovereign nation of the new world. Whether these two positions are compatible or conflicting is a question in many minds. Certainly it is hoped everywhere or almost everywhere that both positions can be maintained. This hope will be possible only if the great ideal and objective of the United Nations is, in large part, realized. It is recognized here that this is not an academic or remote question but one that will vitally affect the personal welfare of every Canadian.

Commended by Communists

Many members of the socialist party are unhappy about the praise that is being heaped, by both the Russian and Canadian Communist papers upon Wm. Irvine, CCF M.P. from Alberta. Only a short while ago the CCF leader denied that there was any sympathy or co-operation between the two parties who advocate similar "ideologies."

Mr. Irvine defended Russia's spy activities in Canada, denounced Ivor Gouzenko, who revealed the Russian plot to the police, for his loyalty to Canada, claimed that Russia's standard of living is not much below that of Canada and that Russian government is representative of the people. He also said that the report of twenty million in Russian concentration camps was "not worth denying."

The CCF member of parliament was apparently not able to give any proof for his statements and most observers will give his performance off as an "emotional outburst."

On Amusements

A town that never has anything in the way of public amusements is well on the way to the cemetery. Anyone who will do nothing for his town is helping to dig the grave. The man that will curse his town is furnishing the coffin. The man who is so selfish as to have no time from his business affairs to give to town affairs is furnishing the shroud. The businessman who will not advertise is driving the hearse. The man who is always pulling back from any public enterprise is throwing bouquets on the grave. The man who is stingy and so selfish as to be always howling hard times preaches the funeral sermon and sings the doxology and thus the town lies buried from sorrow and free from all care.

My boy, I would advise you to deliver your grain to Alberta Pool elevators and to stay with the Pool. It has been a big help to us Alberta farmers; it is our business and it is up to us to make it successful.

I believe in co-operation and I think we farmers should stand shoulder to shoulder to show the world that we can operate our business in the way we want it done.

Our Alberta Wheat Pool operates for the people on the land and not for the investor or speculator. It has cut to the bone the cost of grain handling. It has corrected abuses and is providing a fine trustworthy service.

The Pool put a patronage dividend policy into effect, compelling other grain companies to do likewise. They never would have done so but for the Pool.

Original Pool members put up over $8 millions in cash to build the Alberta Wheat Pool. You can increase your ownership in the Pool merely by delivering your grain. You will get patronage dividends in cash and reserves. Ownership lies in the reserves.

The aim is to keep Alberta Pool Elevators in the hands of operating farmers. Stay with the Pool and you will always be glad you did so.

Canada's Health Problem

AMONG THE MANY PROBLEMS which have had to be faced in Canada in this post-war period, is the critical shortage of medical facilities throughout the country. Recent reports have shown that at present there is urgent need for 27,000 more hospital beds in Canada and that the services of 9,000 additional nurses are needed. There is also a shortage of doctors. All this means that there must be many Canadians who are ill and are not receiving adequate care because of the lack of hospital beds, nurses, and doctors. The situation appeared to grow acute during the war, and to have failed to right itself since. Surveys have shown that the problem is not confined to any one section of the country, but is general all across Canada, and it is obviously a matter of national interest to plan some action to improve the situation.

Is A Need For Prompt Action

The federal Department of Health and the Health League of Canada have both shown interest and concern over the present inadequate health services throughout the Dominion and have made efforts to awaken the public to the need for prompt attention to the problem. At the recent meeting of the Health League, held in Montreal, Dr. Gordon Bates, general director stressed the national aspect of health problems, pointing out that it is in the interests of the country as a whole, to have a high standard of health in each community. As an example of this need, Dr. Bates pointed out that with the modern means of transportation, communicable diseases could spread rapidly from place to place, if proper controls were not in effect in all parts of the country.

Much Depends Upon Health

The members of the Health League were also told that at the present time the best record for health in the British Empire is held by New Zealand but that there was no reason why, by united action, Canada's record could not become the best in the world. Public support, both moral and financial will be needed to build up the deficiency in hospital accommodation and this is indeed an important factor in bringing health services here up to an adequate standard. The lack of doctors and nurses is likewise serious, and public encouragement should also be given to the extension of training facilities and perhaps the addition of further inducements to young people to enter these professions. A great deal of a nation's progress depends upon the physical well being of its people and Canada's health problem should not be allowed to grow more acute.

Glider Makes 187-Mile Flight

WICHITA FALLS, Tex. — A 187-mile motorless flight was made by Eric Nessler, national French champion, in the 14th annual national soaring meet, officials announced.

It was the longest flight since the opening of the 17-day meet on July 4. Nessler's hop was from Sheppard Field to the rim of the Palo Duro Canyon near Tulla, Tex.

Nessler made the flight in five hours after taking off with 50 other contestants who spread out to their chosen goals in Texas and Oklahoma. He departed from Wichita Falls at 1:29 p.m. and arrived at 6:30 p.m. on the canyon rim.

Second best flight was the 165-mile hop made by Wally Wiberg, a native of Seattle, Wash.

After getting married to his late secretary, he remarked: "Well, my dear, I suppose I must get some one to take your place in the office."

"I've been thinking of that," responded the bride: "My cousin is just leaving school."

"What's her name?"

"John Henry Briggs," said the bride sweetly.

As the old lady sat peacefully near the 18th green of the public golf course a golf ball suddenly struck the ground quite near. Her pet dog at once ran forward and seized it.

A moment later the golfer, red in the face with rage, came up, waving a club and shouting indignantly.

"Put the ball down, Fido," said the old lady sweetly. "Here's the kind gentleman to knock it off for you again."

Two cyclists pulled up for the night at a hotel.

"Well, I think," said the host, "that you'll have a comfortable night. It's a feather bed."

At two o'clock in the morning one of the cyclists roused his companion.

"Change places with me, Dick," he groaned. "It's my turn to lie on the feather."

He was a very good barber, but his spelling was unsound. On the wall of his shop was a card bearing the words, "Hair Cutting, 8d; Singing, 10d." When young Percival drifted in he spotted the card.

"Short at the back and round the ears, please," he piped, seating himself in the chair. "And you can give me a couple of verses and chorus of 'Roll Out the Barrel'."

FAMOUS PILOT CONSIDERING OFFERS

BATHURST, N.B. — George F. (Buzz) Beurling, 25, Canada's most decorated fighter pilot of the Second World War, is considering several phases of flying work for his future.

"It's possible I'll become a pilot for a private individual," the slim keen-eyed hero of Malta's defence said in an interview here recently.

"I am also interested in obtaining contracts for bush flying to northern mining camps. My main objective, right now is to organize a charter service. I would also like to own a flying circus."

"Actually, I'm just feeling my way around. It's slow getting started."

Offers for private flying had included several from New Brunswick, and individuals had been "very kind and generous".

The noted pilot, who rose to the rank of flight lieutenant in the R.C.-A.F. and won the DSO, DFC, DFM and Bar, has been doing charter work out of Sherbrooke, Que., and taking part in air shows.

DIAMOND SOLD FOR $15,000
GEORGETOWN, British Guiana.—A rough diamond weighing 49½ carats found near the Meamu river brought $15,000, the highest price ever recorded in British Guiana for a stone, it was revealed in official figures for 1946 released here. The report showed diamond production last year was 30,957 carats—more than double 1945's output. This was the first substantial increase since production started to decline in this colony in 1923.

EIRE HOUSEWIVES FIND BACON SCARCE

DUBLIN.—Housewives in Eire find bacon scarce and dear... Few droves of pigs are seen in the streets of Irish towns and villages and the men in the bacon factories are wondering how long they will have their jobs.

These are signs of the decline of Eire's bacon industry. After years of price disturbances, feed shortages during the war brought a 50 per cent. cut in the country's hog population.

In 1940 farmers produced 1,227,403 pigs for market. In the year which ended last April the number had fallen to 645,411 and prices had more than trebled.

The curers complain bitterly that there are plenty of people who will pay more than they can afford, to cure the meat illegally and sell it privately at fantastic prices; and that pork butchers, with lower overhead, are using half the pigs in the country.

Now the government is reported considering new legislation to put the hog and bacon industry back on its feet. One forecast is there will be central, government organized purchasing machinery to keep hogs out of the black market.

This matter of reduced hog production is typical of the whole livestock industry in a country which used to rely mainly on imported feeding stuffs that have not been available in quantity since 1939.

Farthings To Stay In British Coinage

LONDON.—A demand for the abolition of the farthing, small British coin with a value of about half a cent, was rejected in the House of Commons by Glenvil Hall, financial secretary to the Treasury, because of its use for purchasing of cheap basic items like milk and flour.

L. D. Gammans, Conservative asked for abolition of the coin on the grounds that it has no monetary value, but Hall said farthings are being minted at the rate of 13,500,000 a year to meet the demands of banks. It still has monetary value, he said.

Interesting Story—

BLACKOUT VERSUS SPOTLIGHT

By ANNETTE VICTORIN

MARGUERITE WESTON knew what all her friends were whispering about her. That she just couldn't get a man on a second date. And the tragic part of it was that she couldn't.

One after another, they dated her and never came back. It was an ordeal to face friends and keep smiling casually when her heart was really breaking.

Then Joe Martin came home. The same Joe who had won the silver star in the navy. The same Joe who had winged across a football field and thrilled thousands with his skill and speed. The same Joe who had once carried her books home from school when she had been in pigtails and had not won scholarships, earned degrees and silver cups in tennis, swimming, boating and skating.

Joe Martin was almost as famous in his achievements as Marguerite Western was in hers. So when he asked her for a date, rather coolly, as they met in the corner drug store, everyone knew that it would be like two crack trains colliding head-on.

As Marguerite was coming out her dark curls and reflecting on the evening before her with Joe, the bell rang through the house and Aunt Matilda dashed in.

She looked at her niece appraisingly.

"Another date I suppose?" she asked as though she didn't know. Then she added deliberately, "Look here Maggie, take my advice and blackout the spotlight. Don't be like me. I'm an old maid because I did all the talking."

Marguerite looked at Aunt Matilda. She'd never heard her use that tone before, there was something nostalgic in it, something that made her feel sorry for her aunt.

"I don't get it," she said, smoothing out the powder on her face and wondering why Joe Martin had never married so far. He was awfully handsome and stuck up too!

"Don't talk too much before you get married," Aunt Matilda went on, "you can make up for it after you are. I always told the boys how great I was and now I'm talking to myself."

"But do I do that?" Marguerite asked that in horror.

Aunt Matilda looked at her impatiently.

"Are you getting repeat dates? A girl who acts too smart makes a man feel dumb." With that she bounced out of the house as though unable to contain her impatience any longer.

Marguerite stood looking at herself for a long time thoughtfully.

When Joe Martin came she extended her hand shyly in greeting. She didn't say much as they rode along in the car.

"Won any medals or trophies lately?" he asked.

She shook her head sadly and then asked eagerly: "But how about you, tell me about yourself!"

He looked at her unbelievably and then began to talk. Every once in a while he would stop and look at Marguerite but she made no attempt to dominate the conversation. Finally he said:

"But most of all I got to like shooting at targets. I'm really quite a hand at it." Say, he exclaimed suddenly, "there isn't any place we could stop and do some shooting around here."

Marguerite thought a while. "Let's go to Riverview. I've wanted to get out there all summer."

"Let's!" Joe agreed and along they drove.

It was nice sitting next to Joe Martin she thought. It would be heavenly to sit next to him like this all her life. But her dates always ended with one...

There was so much excitement in the park when they arrived. Barkers calling people to their stands, coaxing them inside with marked-down tickets.

Marguerite and Joe walked through the crowded aisles and eyed the many colorful and exciting rides on the grounds. Then they reached the shooting galleries.

Joe bought a round of shots for Marguerite. She tried hitting some of the moving targets but didn't hit a single one of them.

"Gosh, but you were pretty close," Joe remarked, eyeing the gun impatiently. He loaded the rifle and aimed. Bull's eye first shot and the duck dropped behind the vividly green fence. Another shot and another duck keeled over. That was the way it was for eight shots.

"You're sure good at it!" Marguerite cried enthusiastically. Joe looked at her and he was beaming.

"Here you try it again," he urged.

"No, Joe, you go on... I just don't know the first thing about shooting. Gee, I wish I could aim like you," she said longingly. You're tops!"

"Well, here I'll show you how," he offered. He had to put his arm clear around her shoulders and she felt warm little waves well all over her. Her aim seemed good, Joe had explained how to line up her eye with the indicator of the gun, but Marguerite missed when she pressed the trigger. It was no use!

Joe bought four more rounds of shots and had a crowd of admiring youngsters standing around watching him. He only missed once, all the other shots sent the ducks under. All eyes watching him were full of admiration and so were Marguerite's. They walked to another stand and Joe knocked over four rag cats that were standing on a fence. The stand owner gave Marguerite a huge white teddy bear. She carried it around in her arms all evening and there was a warm beat in her cheeks.

"I haven't had so much fun since I was a kid!" Joe exclaimed. Then linking his hand through hers he said, "Gee, you're swell! How about coming out here again before the place closes?"

Marguerite could only nod happily. But that night when she was taking off her suit, she turned back the lapel and unfastened the little gold pin. It was the one she had won sometime ago in the Sharp Shooting Meet of the season. First Prize!

Movement Of Farm Workers

The minister of labor has announced that arrangements are completed with the provincial departments of agriculture and the railways for another organized movement of farm workers from Ontario and Quebec to help with the harvest in the prairie provinces.

The number of workers required this year in the west is estimated at 2100.

While this number is somewhat smaller than in former years the minister stated that it is important for men to leave as soon as possible in view of harvesting already being under way in the west.

Eastern farmers are very appreciative of the assistance of the 1,000 men who came from the prairies to help with haying and early harvesting. Although the number of these men was less than required their services have been of great assistance to Ontario farmers, many of whom are now ready to offer reciprocal aid to farmers in the west.

Watch The Young Turkeys

Summer and early fall often prove to be a time of unnecessary losses with our young turkeys, states C. W. Traves, poultry commissioner. As a rule they are hatched later than are the chickens and as a result the pasture is usually not at its best when the poults are placed out. There is also a greater tendency to feel that turkeys are good rustlers and therefore do not need the feed and attention that the growing chickens require. Turkeys rustle because they have to. If an ample supply of feed and water is available they stay close to their quarters. Because of the lack of attention to many flocks of young turkeys we have many cases of nutritional rump or vitamin A deficiency reported during the summer and early fall.

Feed the growing turkeys as carefully as you do the young chickens and see that they have their share of the good pasture available and there will be little or no trouble with them.

Young turkeys should be watched for tape worms during the summer and fall. Fly time is tape worm time for young stock. Practice strict sanitation at all times. Should tape worms appear they are easily controlled by one of the reliable pills or powders available on the market.

Arrange Feed and Seed Supplies Now

Crop damage through hail, frost or drought, has occurred in many Alberta districts this year. Many farmers may find they have not sufficient seed for spring planting or enough feed grain to carry their live stock through until another crop is harvested.

The field crops branch urges farmers who have been unfortunate enough to lose their crop to arrange for seed and feed supplies without delay.

BREWING INDUSTRY OF ALBERTA

FARMER'S COLUMN

By R.J.M.

Yes, I know you farmers are busy and so is Mother Nature. She is growing perennial weeds like Canada Thistle, Perennial Sow Thistle and Hoary Cress. Now until freeze-up is the time to best control the perennial weeds, therefore if a wet day occurs during harvest how about plowing up those patches of weeds in your field? It is also an ideal time to spray or dust weeds along fence lines and ditches.

There are several methods of control that can be practiced by you as a farmer. First, an early maturing barley like Olli or greenfeed. Secondly, fall rye. Thirdly, cultivation. Fourth forage crops and lastly chemicals. Most intelligent agronomists use a combination of all the above suggestions.

Changes have occurred in the last number of years in the cultivation practices. It was thought at one time that a completely black summerfallow was necessary but now the idea of allowing the perennial to reach a height of 1½ to 2 in. before being cut off by farm implements is best. In this way you expend the plant food previously stored in the underground root stocks. However, there is one fault with the above method of control and that is that during harvest a farmer is so busy that weed control goes by the board, and by failing to cultivate during the fall the control practiced during the summer has been lost. Don't fail to fall plow or cultivate your patches of perennial weeds. Keep at it until freezeup and leave the land rough and exposed to the frost.

Fall rye, forage or Olli barley to control perennial weeds, will be discussed at a later date.

If you use sodium chlorate be careful of the fire hazard when poisoning weeds. If you are using a spray wash all clothing and keep a supply of water on hand as a precautionary measure. Sodium chlorate used as a powder or dust is very effective when used at a rate of 1½ to 2 pounds per 100 square feet. Be sure to dust powder outside the patch to catch all small suckers or plants. It also sterilizes the soil so that nothing will grow for a year or two but isn't that better than driving along the road and gazing at perennial weeds in all fence corners?

Oddly enough I expect every one who reads this article to do something about their perennial weeds.

Young Man: "Your daughter has promised to be my wife, Mr. Smith."

Mr. Smith: "It was your own fault. What else did you expect, hanging around here every night."

PET IS LESSON IN ARITHMETIC—This little animal, a Syrian hamster, produces a brood of 12 to 15 young every three weeks, makes an affectionate pet, and holds a cupful of food in its mouth so that it becomes as broad as it is long, like temperatures of 70 degrees or more and lives on green leafy vegetables. His ability to reproduce so rapidly may be a drawback as laboratories are on the look-out for such rapid-reproducers for experimental purposes.

OUR COMPLETE SHORT STORY—

GAMBLER'S LUCK

By JOHN ROWLEY

SOME there are who are dead set against gambling and Ella May Thompson was one of these. And gambling was the one thing which Ella May and Ed Ferguson differed on.

It was Saturday night again and Ella May was in her small room on the second floor of her Aunt's house fixing her long blonde hair in preparation for her weekly date with Ed Ferguson who worked in the local drug store. Ella May was a large woman and in most things a sensible one. Ed Ferguson had been coming to see her every week now for more than a year and he hadn't progressed any further than he had the first night. Perhaps it was because he lacked imagination... or perhaps he was merely cautious!

Whatever the case Ella May had reached the point where she meant business. She had made up her mind it would be best to marry Ed first and cure him of his gambling habits afterwards. Ella May was a woman with a great deal of faith in herself. She gave her hair one last little pat and stood up as the voice of her Aunt drifted up from below. "Ed's here," she called. "Are you most ready?"

Ella May started down the stairs by way of an answer. She could tell without seeing it exactly how the parlour would be. It was a large room which was kept locked except when Ed Ferguson... or the pastor called.

Ed would be sitting nervously on the very edge of the large, brown hair stuffed sofa. His hat would be on his knee and his hair would be slicked back and parted at the exact centre. He would have a smile on his face and the back of his neck and part of his ears would be quite red. Ed just never had got used to being with women.

It was as she had foreseen. Ella May smiled, showing large white teeth. "Hello, Ed," she said. "Nice evening, isn't it?"

Ed said: "Yes." Which was part of the formula also.

"Well, I guess I'm about ready, Ed," she said next, and Ed stood up, self conscious in his Sunday clothes, and gave her his arm. They left the house thus, walking very slowly and carefully until they reached the main street... for all the neighbours would be out on their verandahs to see Ed Ferguson and Ella May Thompson go by.

They went into the Bijou theatre and saw the usual movie and then went into the small restaurant run by Joe Pugsly and had supper... and this was the time Ella May had been waiting for.

They had got down to their coffee and Ed was his usual talkative self, answering: "Uh uh! well, I declare!" and other equally responsive remarks to Ella May's attempts at conversation.

Finally Ella May as if in fun spun a penny on the table. She watched Ed narrowly as the coin toppled and fell. "Heads," she said. She tried it again and that time it came up 'tails'. Ed's eyes had followed the coin as it spun and Ella May struck while the iron was hot. "Let's match for pennies," Ella May said.

Ed Ferguson looked interested at that. He loved to gamble... it was in fact, almost a mania with him... anything at all from poker to matching pennies. It was all the same to Ed.

"I thought you were against it," he told her.

Ella May laughed. "I am," she said. "But it won't hurt to match a few pennies."

Ed guessed it wouldn't... besides, it was something more to his liking. They matched for pennies and finally Ella May brought up the question of their future. She had broached the subject many times before and always Ed had been evasive. This time was no different.

"Why, I can't say," he told her. "I ain't ready to get hitched yet. It's something a man's got to think out... there's no need to be in a hurry."

Ella May thought that a year wasn't very hasty, but she kept that opinion to herself. "How about tossing a coin," she asked. "Heads, we get married at once. Tails, we wait." Ed said: "Why, I don't know about that."

"Let's do it," Ella May coaxed. "I thought you were a gambler."

"W-e-e-l, all right," Ed said finally. "If you want, it'll be puttin' it up to chance at any rate."

Ella May said, "I've got a bigger coin, we'll use that." She took a half dollar from her purse and held it in her hand. "Heads," she said. "And we'll get married next week. Tails, and I'll wait 'till you're ready."

Ed nodded. "All right," he told her. "It's a deal!"

A grinning waiter was asked to toss the coin. It lit on the table, rolled against the side of a plate and at last came to rest. Ed leaned forward and looked at it.

"Heads!" he said.

Ella May picked up the coin and dropped it back into her purse. "Looks like that settles it," she remarked.

Ed had an odd expression on his face. Marriage had never loomed quite so close before and he wasn't sure whether he liked the idea or not. "Are you goin' to back down, Ed?" Ella May wanted to know.

Ed shook his head. "A bargain's a bargain," he said.

Ella May smiled and told him that she was ready to go home. They walked back slowly and on the steps, before she went inside, Ella May let him kiss her. They stood for a moment together and Ella May said, "And after we're married," she paused.

UBIQUITOUS HELICOPTER HAS NEW ROLE—New way to inspect power line installations is demonstrated by this helicopter at Chicago, Ill. Helicopter hovers over towers while an engineer makes inspection.

ed a moment. "No more gambling. It don't pay."

Ed was more than a little puzzled as he left.

Up in her room Ella May threw herself on her bed happily. At last the decision had been made. She thought she would wake up her Aunt and tell her about it but, on second thought, decided against it. Instead she got up and got the half dollar from her purse and flicked it into the air. She smiled as it landed 'heads' up on the bed.

She was still smiling when she turned it over and looked at the 'head' on the other side. No... Ella May Thompson didn't believe in gambling!

U.S. To Test Machine That Cures Ailments

WASHINGTON.—The Government shortly will test a German machine whose inventors claim it could cure a variety of ailments — including asthma and migraine headaches — with ionized air.

Migraine heretofore has resisted nearly all attempts to alleviate it, and United States officials are skeptical of the German claims.

The machine, in a state of disrepair, was brought here from the University of Frankfurt medical school after the war. It is called a "unipolar ionized air apparatus."

Its heart is a tube of magnesium which, when heated to incandescence, gives off electrically charged particles which are picked up by an air stream shot past the tube. The patient inhales the ionized air through a special mask.

A German professor named H. Lampert said the machine relieved high blood pressure, migraine, asthma, hay fever, sinus trouble, vasomotoric angina pectoris, vasomotoric disturbances during the climacterium, weather sensitiveness in persons suffering from muscular rheumatism, scar pains and climate allergy.

All of those maladies have been hard to ameliorate with other treatments.

The machine was brought here by the Commerce Department's Office of Technical Services. Charles E. Reed, chief of the OTS medical and pharmaceutical unit, said that after repairs are made, the device will be tested at one of the universities here.

Reed was dubious about the machine's value and said OTS would not publicize it until after the tests.

Earlier Saturdays

Notices are being displayed at the Bank of Montreal announcing a change in banking hours on Saturday mornings, and customers are requested to do their business from 9 to 11 o'clock instead of from 9.30 to noon, as formerly. The change becomes effective this Saturday.

Briefly the idea behind the change is to give the bank's staff a better break on their week-end time. The old idea that bankers worked from only 10 to 3, to the envy of most people, has long been exploded. This was never true for much remains for the banker to do after his doors are closed.

With the great burden of work on banking personnel which developed during the war and which has carried into the peace, it has been necessary for bank staffs to work much overtime for a number of years. It is frequently the case on Saturdays with the traditional public closing at noon for the staff to be obliged to work on until anywhere from 1 to 3 p.m., to say the least, goes hard on plans for a Saturday afternoon outing or a week-end's fishing.

Customers as a whole will be glad to see this relief for the people serving them at the bank who will thus be helped to a little more leisure time.

Safety Near Schools

On September 2nd more than 180,000 children returned to schools in Alberta, following the summer vacation. Many thousands of these youngsters are attending school for the first time, making it a paramount "First" for all car and truck drivers to watch for them and avoid accidents.

In anticipation of a record school influx, school and municipal authorities should examine and refurbish school zone signs crosswalk and other pedestrian aids in the vicinity of schools.

With the heavier traffic many old cars limping along and a resurgence noted in car speeds and bad driving practices, children returning to school need every traffic safety aid it is possible to provide to prevent unnecessary injuries and deaths.

June (a bride) was showing Uncle over her new home.

"This is my room, Uncle; you see we have twin beds, they are so much more hygienic. That's Harold's, this one's mine."

Then Uncle noticed a blue Telechron clock on the mantel shelf and remarked, "What a charming little clock."

"Yes," said June, "it's a wedding present from Aunt Emily."

A few days later Uncle received a note from June telling how the blue Telechron clock had disappeared the very afternoon he was there: could he throw any light on it?

Uncle replied: "Dear June, look in Harold's bed."
